The text:

① Kasey Remmereid, 18, owns a successful photography studio. She is making a name for herself among students and families and is currently photographing a fashion show in Paris. Kasey says it started as a hobby by taking pictures of friends for free. "As my Dad started his own business at 17, when I told him I wanted to have my own business, he said, 'I'm never going to tell you no,' " Kasey said. At first, she began working by taking pictures at home. Later, her parents found a vacant building and paid its rent so that she could have her own shop.

② "I'd go to high school, then to my studio for two hours, and later on to daycare where I was working as a nurse. I'd go back home to do my homework, then back to the studio and work as long as I could," said Kasey. "When I earned a lot of money, I thought of buying a computer and a nicer camera. My parents told me that it was going to be expensive... and I said, yes, but just trust me. It's going to pay off!" Now as she's working with fashion shows, her promise to her parents has been fulfilled. "I'm self-sufficient, independent and I want to tell people 'I'm doing great.' "

③ She has no regret about missing college, especially when knowing that her friends who got a degree couldn't have a job or a clear future plan. Yet, she is lucky to have both. "I love what I'm doing. I just can't be happier. I wouldn't have been able to make my business a success without working hard and getting financial and emotional support from my parents. That is my secret to success," said Kasey.
